

Statement from the Kelsey Coalition

Lynn Meagher, a parent leader in the Kelsey Coalition, is currently being attacked in the international media with false accusations of abuse by her now adult trans-identified children. “These charges are hurtful and untrue. I am deeply saddened that my dear children are suffering further manipulation at the hands of trans activists,” Ms. Meagher stated today.

Transgender activists and irresponsible journalists have published unsubstantiated allegations as fact. Their defamation of Ms. Meagher is an unconscionable attempt to steer the public focus away from the real issue: the harmful medical transition of children.

The transactivist community claims to be victims of bullying and erasure. But the smearing of Ms. Meagher exposes them as the real bullies and demonstrates why so few parents are willing to speak out.

Lynn Meagher is now, and always was, a loving parent whose devotion to her children is evidenced by her willingness to sacrifice her own comfort and safety to try to save them — and children like them — from the hateful tactics of the trans activism community and the medical entrepreneurs willing to profit from human suffering. We are grateful to her for her bravery and continued work on behalf of all children in the face of such sorrow.

The Kelsey Coalition is a non-partisan, volunteer-run organization based in the United States. Our singular mission is to promote policies and laws to protect young people who identify as transgender or nonbinary from medical and psychological harms.
